SALT LAKE CITY.

Elevation 4350 Feet, Settled in 1847.

IT is through captivating scenes of tranquil peace and indescribable loveliness that we approach our Mecca, the world-famed Salt Lake City, lying at the foot of a spur of the Wasatch Mountains, and commandiug a view of the entire valley, both ranges of mountains and the southern portion of the Great Salt Lake. Of the charms, material advantages and social life of this lovely city but few of the East have a correct understanding. Salt Lake City is the Capital of Utah Territory; has a population of 55,000, and presents a great number of attractions to delight the visitor. Its streets are 132 feet wide, including sidewalks twenty feet in width, bordered with shade trees and laid out at right angles. Along each side of the streets is a clear, cold stream of water from the mountain canons, which, with the numerous shade trees, fruit orchards and gardens, give the city an indescribable air of coolness, comfort and repose. There is more foliage here than in any city of
